

Artist: Patrex
Title: The Launch Remixes

Release Date: 18th June 2012
Release ID: CW046x

The Launch was Patrex's first release on City Wall Records and has been given a new lease of life from some of the labels regular artists. A variety of styles are exemplified here from the industrial interlocking grooves of Tuomas Rantanen, to the progressive acid of Nelman, to the driving kick drums of Ross Harper. Patrex says that the loops behind The Launch were some of the first he ever came up with so this is a special track for him. Meanwhile his latest work on City Wall Records "The Planets EP Part 2" is attracting support from a host of names including Lars Klein and Patrick DSP! But it's not just City Wall that has picked up on Patrex's talents and so expect to see releases from him on a variety of other labels in the coming months too.

The Launch (Tuomas Rantanen Remix) ▶

An industrial clock work of interlocking grooves weaved through the Patrex original core percussive loop. Waves of crispy distortion add aesthetics while a nifty rhythm change after the breakdown keeps things rocking. The final section sees haunting pads rise through the haze. Epic and not to be missed.

The Launch (Nelman Remix) ▶

Nelman adds a massive acid twist to really make this his own while the thumping beats and top notch percussions keep it moving. Meanwhile the pad lines from the original are weaved in nicely throughout but it is in the second section when the acid line lifts off that things really become ablaze.

The Launch (Ross Harper Remix) ▶

Here the pads of the original are mashed into new rhythmic patterns are set against a kinda tough riding tech house beat. Things are wound down temporarily in the mid-section before a smashing drop takes things back to the beat and an intense acid squelch takes the lead.
